A senior associate in the Litigation practice group, Katie Doherty is skilled at representing clients in a variety of disputes both at trial and in mediation, as well as negotiating settlements.

Katie's experience includes researching and drafting motions and memoranda as well as oral arguments on the same, negotiating with opposing counsel, defending client interests in depositions and cross-examination, investigating claims, and managing trial dockets to ensure swift disposition of cases and preservation of defenses. Her experience includes asbestos, diacetyl, earplug and talc litigation, as well as contract disputes and premises liability defense. Katie performs a significant amount of pro bono work in both Missouri and Illinois and loves taking novel and difficult cases to acquire justice for her clients. She is also an Adjunct Assistant Professor for the Spring 2024 semester at Saint Louis University School of Law, teaching Legal Methods in the Academic Resources Center.

BACKGROUND

Prior to joining Armstrong Teasdale, Katie served as an associate attorney in the O'Fallon, Illinois, office of a national litigation firm. She also has served as a corrections officer for the St. Louis County Department of Justice Services.
