

LYNN GOESSLING TALKS REAL ESTATE TRENDS IN ST. LOUIS BUSINESS JOURNAL

Armstrong Teasdale Partner Lynn Goessling discusses commercial real estate trends and strategies this week in the St. Louis Business Journal. As part of the publication's Table of Experts feature, Goessling joined other women in the commercial real estate field for a roundtable discussion of topics ranging from the pressures on office and industrial sectors, adaptive reuse projects and creative redevelopment strategies, tenant leasing strategies for retail, and the effect of economic uncertainty on real estate and development.

With more than two decades of experience in commercial real estate and business law, Goessling represents a diverse range of clients, from developers and landowners to privately held businesses and public companies. Active in all sectors of the commercial real estate industry, she is often called upon to counsel clients through acquisitions and dispositions, easements, leasing, sales, complex title issues, land development matters and projects involving economic development and municipal or special financing incentives, including tax abatement, tax increment financing (TIF) and various development districts
