Pamela Winter is an associate in the firm's Litigation practice group. She handles a variety of civil litigation matters for insurance companies and corporations of all sizes.

Skillfully advocating for her clients in both state and federal court, Pam has counseled corporations, contractors and insurers in cases involving transportation, premises and retail liability, personal injury defense and construction defects. She has experience from case inception to trial, including conducting depositions, drafting motions and briefs, and conducting discovery and legal research.

BACKGROUND

Prior to joining Armstrong Teasdale, Pam gained valuable experience as a civil litigation associate at other Kansas City area law firms, where she focused primarily on insurance defense matters related to premises and retail liability, personal injury and construction defects.

Prior to that, she clerked for Judge Charles H. McKenzie of the Circuit Court of Jackson County, Missouri.

EXPERIENCE

Defense of Convenience Store Client in Personal Injury Case

Represented a convenience store client in a jury trial before the Western District of Missouri in a case involving a slip and fall at a fueling station following a major winter storm. The plaintiff asked the jury for damages related to medical expenses, past pain and suffering, and future pain and suffering. Following a four-day trial, the jury assigned 94% of the fault to the plaintiff and only 6% to the client.
