

PARTNER TREZ QUINN FEATURED AS ST. LOUIS BUSINESS JOURNAL “CHARACTER”

St. Louis Litigation Partner Untress “Trez” Quinn was featured as a “St. Louis Character” in this week’s issue of the St. Louis Business Journal. In the full-page feature, “St. Louis Character: Trez Quinn detoured through the ER on his way to the courtroom,” he speaks to his military and medical background, and his path to becoming a trial lawyer.

Quinn joined Armstrong Teasdale in March 2020 and focuses on the defense of medical malpractice and other catastrophic loss lawsuits in both state and federal court. In the article, Quinn speaks to why he joined the firm:

“...Armstrong Teasdale has a global footprint, and it’s expanding locally, opening an office in Edwardsville. With all of that, I think I can better serve my clients.”

His defense of such high-stakes litigation matters in both Illinois and Missouri has included cases involving mental health/suicide, neurological, obstetrical, neonatal, pediatric, cardiothoracic, gastroenterological and other traumatic injuries and losses. Quinn leverages his experience as a registered nurse in both direct patient care and health care administration to skillfully counsel his clients through difficult health care-related matters.
