Sydney Johnson is a member of the firm's Intellectual Property practice group, where she focuses on intellectual property litigation.

Having held clerkships and worked as a summer associate, Sydney gained invaluable experience that she brings to each client representation. Her past experience also extends to drafting motions, petitions, subpoenas, discovery requests and responses, as well as trial preparation and deposition, for a wide range of matters involving mass tort litigation, breach of contract and probate law.

BACKGROUND

Prior to joining Armstrong Teasdale full time, Sydney worked as a law clerk. She has held additional clerkships and worked as a summer associate for another St. Louis area law firm. In addition, Sydney served as a teaching assistant for Patent Law and Policy at the University of Missouri School of Law.
